GETTYSBURG AND CHICKAMAUGA THE BEST BATTLES OF THE WAR. John C. Ropes, in June Scribner. The national instinct on this subject is perfectly correct. It was at Gettysburg and Chickamauga that our American armies were at their best and did their best. Never were they-either before or after those memorable engagements-so strong, so well officered, so determined to win, so resolved not to yield. They were then, we repeat, at their best-containing none but season ed troops, under veteran officers, inured to war, both armies confident of victory, and pretty nearly, taking all things together, equally matched. And no one can read the story of those great battles without being proud of his country and his race, for never was there more reso lute and obstinate and gallant fighting done, and never were severe losses more unshrinkingly borne. Nor can it be truly said of either of these battles that the beaten army did not fight as hard and as long as its more successful antago nist. There is glory enough for all Hence it is fitting that both fields-Get tysburg and Chickamauga-should be dedicated to the perpetual remembrance of the great battles so worthily fought

PLUM CURCULIO.

Some spraying experiments were made by a leading fruit grower of Ottawa county, Ohio. Having two pear orchards several rods apart, the fruit of month were $46,996,976, as against $42,- which has for some years been greatly injured by the plum curculio, he determined spraying one of them. Never before have so many passengers been carried as are carried now. The ships that were regarded as leviathans fifteen or sixteen years ago are as yachts compared with more recent additions to the various fleets. Scarcely more than ten years have elapsed since sixteen knots was the maximum speed; now it is twenty knots, with the certainty of an almost immediate increase to twenty-one or twenty-two knots. The tonnage has been increased within the same period from a maximum of five thousand to ten thousand five hundred, while ten years ago two hundred cabin passengers were as many as any steamer could accommodate with a reasonable degree of comfort on one voyage, it is not uncommon now to find over five hundred as the complement of one steamer. When steamers of sixteen and seventeen knots were built, it was said that they were too large and too fast, and that they

THE POSTAL SERVICE IN SWITZERLAND. We had sent our baggage, as we had been advised, to the post-office, where we at once went. The bag which we wished to post to Zermatt seemed to us very heavy, but scythes and barrels and bundles of old iron, labeled and addressed, were lying on the floor, and we supposed it must be all right, though the postmistress, as soon as we had paid our money, turned away without giving us stamps or receipt, and had nothing more to do with us. We need not have
